The American residents will ask for a hearing before the senate committee in advance of any report on the treaty. In the meantime the secretary of state is asked to withdraw the treaty. Captain Percy says the Isle of Pines is the greatest natural winter resort in the world. The waters of Rosario springs, he says, are famous. While not well known they are said to possess most remarkable curative properties.

Portland, Ore., Sept. 26.—When Chin Chow Too came to the Lewis and Clark exposition with a group of Chinese children from Seattle, the girl automaton in the manufactures building, with the rubber neck three feet long, "rubbed" and grined "more than her usual spirit." Chin Chow Too is a Chinese lad who understands "Melican" as well as Chinese. He is a tutor in a school of instruction for Chinese children at Seattle, established through the generosity and patriotism of Chin Ching Hock, a merchant of that city. Mr. Chin-saw growing up around him a colony of Chinese children who were learning more English than Chinese, and he felt that they should be instructed in the language and history of their father's country. Chin Chow Too, being an apt student, was engaged as tutor. The Chinese merchant conceived the idea that the boys and girls with the pagodas should be sent to the exposition to study thoroughly the various exhibits, and their young tutor was sent along to guide them through the mazes. Mr. Chin came along also, and in the party were his wife and four children. Likewise came Chin Wing, Ark Wing, and all the other little Chinese pupils in Too's school. They spent about ten days in looking about the buildings, and gave the "Trail" a wide berth, as they were after information instead of fun. The children attracted much attention, but they did not permit this to detract from the purpose of their visit. They took notes in their notebooks, and went back to Seattle much learned in American industries, occupations and products.

The "Times" has always enjoyed the intimate friendship of Mr. Hawkins. In fact, he was the city editor of the Times away back in the strenuous days of El Paso, consequently this paper felt no hesitancy in asking him for a statement as to his place of residence, and received this answer: "I am, of course, a citizen of New Mexico and have been for twenty years and more and my residence has always been there. For many years, however, I have been connected with the legal department of corporations centering in El Paso, but engaged in building up the material resources of New Mexico, rendering it necessary for me to be here a great deal of my time. El Paso is the natural center for all of southern New Mexico, where I have always lived."—El Paso Times.
